CHURCH LIFE

Raising godly children by getting kids involved at church:

I asked a classmate of mine at Alliance Theological Seminary on how to raise godly children. His answer is to get them involved at church.

Most kids drop out after or even during high school because they are spectators at church. The best way to model the faith is through a consistently open and honest lifestyle. There is possibly nothing more fulfilling than watching our young people respond to Christ's call, become involved, and continue to mature as Christians. The time and energy we invest in our young people is well worth it. Our society is concerned with: "What's in it for me?" On the other hand, Christ calls His people to serve. We must instill a sense of servanthood in our young people. The ones who find the joy of serving stay committed to their childhood faith. PT from BAC

Parents: Investing Time

"Teens who had at least one adult from church make a significant time investment in their lives also were more likely to keep attending church. More of those who stayed in church – by a margin of 46 percent to 28 percent – said five or more adults at church had invested time with them personally and spiritually.

The Bible teaches that older women should mentor and invest their lives in young women (Titus 2:3-4a). Clearly, this holds true for both of the sexes, Stetzer said. When adults pour their lives into young adults, both are better for it." MK from Lifeway
